VARIETY SHOWER

Miss Hazel Grover gave a variety shower at her home at West Bethel Thursday night to Miss Bertha Mundt in honor of her approaching marriage. Miss Mundt was an over night guest of Miss Grover and after supper was invited to go for a ride. On returning everything seemed as usual and Miss Mundt was asked to step into the dining room to see someone's new suit. Upon opening the door, she was nearly blinded by a brilliant flash-light and greeted by merry voices of some 29 ladies, who had gathered to wish her much happiness.

The long dining table was gaily decorated and streamers of green and pink attached to the ceiling and one end of each streamer fastened to the table. Each streamer had directions telling her where to go, to seek for hidden treasures. Many a journey she made, some ending at "The Clock on the Stairs"—some at the mail box—from attic to cellar Bertha hastened; until the pile of treasures was huge. Then the fun everyone had in seeing her open the bundles, and hearing her exclamations of pleasure for each one. Then a mock wedding was witnessed, which brought down the house and no one could tell who was the best of the actors.

After this refreshments of cake and ice cream were served, and a very beautiful wedding cake, made by Mrs. Grover and Mrs. Alton Luxton, was cut by Miss Mundt and passed to all the guests.

Miss Mundt expressed her thanks and deep appreciation to all who had completely surprised her and so bountifully showered her with lovely gifts.

When worn and weary with striving,

When the pathway has grown too steep,

When they falter 'neath pain's dark torture

God giveth His children sleep!

And they rest from their weariness some struggle

In green pastures by still waters deep;

Oh! sad hearts 'tis a blessed assurance

God giveth His children sleep.

But some day in God's beautiful country

From which no one shall ever roam

All shall wake from the sleep He giveth.

And be happy forever at Home.

Mrs. W. F. Bean went to St. Louis Hospital, Berlin, N. H., Monday.

C. boys is undecided up to the present writing.

MRS. CLYDE INEZ (BARTLETT) EMERY

The subject of this sketch was born in Bethel, April, 1873, the only daughter of James S. and Susan (Edwards) Bartlett, and the greater part of her life was spent in Bethel. She was a graduate of Gould Academy and was a very successful school teacher in Bethel and other towns.

About 35 years ago she was united in marriage to Warren Emery. After some years it became necessary for Mrs. Emery to go out to work and she went to keep house for Hazen Sweeney of Newry. Faithfully she cared for the children who had been left motherless, giving to them the attention and devotion that a mother might have.

An attack of the flu some years ago, followed later by a shock, deprived her of her eyesight and the use of her lower limbs. She was a great sufferer, but her cheerful courage seldom failed her. The girls whom she had cared for in their childhood cared for her through many weary months as best they could.

In the early spring physicians deemed it best for her to have hospital care and for a time she was in the hospital at Rumford for treatment. On April 23 she was moved to the Marcotte Home in Lewiston, where in spite of medical skill and careful nursing she failed rapidly and May 21st she passed quietly on to the land of which it is written "There is no night there."

Mrs. Emery leaves one adopted daughter, Miss Elizabeth Chapman Emery, who has employment in New York; one brother, L. T. Bartlett; three nephews, Harold, Roger and Rodney Bartlett of Bethel, and one aunt, Mrs. Clara Dunham of West Paris.

Services were held Wednesday at S. S. Greenleaf's funeral home. Rev. L. A. Edwards speaking words of comfort to the relatives and friends. Beautiful flowers were sent messages of sympathy. Interment was in the cemetery at North Bethel.

Some times to us all on life's journey

Comes a day so filled with woe

That weary and worn with striving

Our feet refuse to go;

And the tide of a bitter sorrow

Over our hearts doth sweep,

—But hark! there's a blest assurance,

God giveth His loved ones sleep!

And beyond in God's beautiful Home land

Freed from all care and pain:

We hope to find joy and comfort

When He lets us begin again! Bethel, May 23, 1934.

KNIGHT-BENNETT

A most beautiful home wedding was solemnized on Sunday afternoon, May 20th, at two o'clock, when Miss Thelma Cella Bennett of Bethel became the bride of Ralph Landall Knight of Lebanon, N. H. Rev. L. A. Edwards of the Congregational church performed the ceremony, the double ring service being used. The couple were unattended, and only members of the immediate family and intimate friends were present.

To the soft strains of Lohengrin played by Robert Lord, the couple marched in and took their places beneath an arch of evergreen where they received the nuptial vows. The bride was most attractive in a gown of white satin with veil and accessories to match. She carried a shower bouquet of roses and sweet peas.

Following the ceremony an informal reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, and many friends called to extend congratulations to the newly weds. The house was attractively decorated with evergreen and spring flowers, and dainty refreshments were served by Miss Mary Sanborn and the Misses Josephine and Christie Thurston. A beautiful wedding cake adorned the table and was gracefully cut by the bride. The guest book was in charge of Miss Harriet Russell. The high esteem of the couple was attested by the large assortment of gifts presented to them.

Out of town guests for the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Milo Knight, parents of the groom, and Mr. and Mrs. Cecile Flanders of Lebanon, N. H., Mr. and Mrs. Harold G. Bennett and Miss Faye Sanborn of Arlington, Mass., Miss Kathryn Dillon and George E. Booth of Boston, Mass.

During the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Knight left by auto on their wedding trip through Canada, Niagara Falls, and New York City. The bride traveled in a blue swaggar suit with accessories to harmonize. On their return they will reside in Lebanon, N. H., where they have an apartment ready to occupy.

Mrs. Knight is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward E. Bennett of Bethel. She was educated in the local schools, graduating from Gould Academy in the class of 1926 and Forsyth Dental School of Boston in 1932. Since that time she has been employed in the offices of Dr. Henry Grant of Boston and Dr. E. L. Brown of Bethel.

Mr. Knight is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Milo L. Knight of Lebanon, N. H. He was educated in the schools of Lebanon, University of New Hampshire, and graduated from Bryant and Stratton Business College of Boston. He is now employed as accountant for the Tide Water Oil Co. in Lebanon.

The very best wishes for future happiness are extended to this popular young couple by their many friends.

Rev. and Mrs. L. A. Edwards were in Portland Monday.

cloud of white dust followed on down the road. "Hospital me at once—your wife. . . the incessant reiteration of six ghastly words Cardonald had no place. Cardonald. . . al state? Why drag that in? at earthly connection was there been Judy and this man? For whole of that month he had it was true, at the bathing every day, but it was noticed he had behaved himself very for once. He had made no set at any particular girl but spread his undoubted charm pleasantly out thin.

In the wave of reaction from the terror of Judy's death, Cardonald's made only a dent in Tom's mind. Thank God for that good word hope. "When can I see her?" he asked. "How long will she be here? Will she be marked, do you think? . . . Cardonald dead? I'm sorry. But I don't quite see. . . I mean, did my wife collide with his car or did he smash up hers?"

The doctor cleared his throat. "Sooner or later you must know the facts," he said, "and as usual it falls to me to disclose unpleasant things."

"Unpleasant?" "I was careful to use no strong- er word than that."

"I don't understand," said Tom. "Your wife and Cardonald were in the same car, sir. I can tell you precisely what happened because I have it from the man who brought them in. He saw your wife and Cardonald leave his yacht together, with luggage; land, enter the car and with Cardonald driving turn up into the road."

"Coming off the yacht?" But Judy had said that she was going into Bar Harbor to dine and sleep at her aunt's. "Oh, I see. Mrs. Miller was on the yacht. . ."

"No. They were alone. As they were turning the corner a wildly driven car passed a touring bus on the wrong side and there was a head-on crash. I must tell you something more. The brother of one of my nurses is the captain of 'The Swallow' and she was on the yacht. She saw your wife having dinner with Cardonald last night."

Tom looked up quickly and met the doctor's eyes. He was angry.

He resented intensely this second suggestion. Cardonald meant nothing to her. "Why not?" he demanded bluntly. "There were other people on board."

"The crew, yes. Otherwise, as I told you, they were alone."

A nurse came into the room. "Mrs. Pallion's condition's changed a little," she said. "There is a quicker pulse."

"Oh? Then I must go up." The doctor went to the door. "I'll let you see the patient for a minute or two," he said. "Will you follow me?"

Feeling as though there were something red hot in his heart Tom followed with dragging feet. White walls; a white staircase with no carpet; Spartan simplicity and cleanliness; a lofty room with two windows; Judy, the lively and lovely Judy, still and deathlike on a white narrow bed.

"Oh, my God," said Tom. . .

"She spoke your name just now," said the doctor quietly. "Delirium—quite usual—talking in what is, you know, a sort of enforced sleep. She'll probably do so again. Take this chair, but you are not to touch the patient or raise your voice. I'm satisfied with the condition so far. It follows the normal course." He said something to the nurse beneath his breath. He went out, walking softly, and shut the door.

Tom sat, bending forward, hold- ing on to his wrist.

The nurse did not know how to describe his expression except in medical terms. "Acute pain in the head," she stood at the end of the bed, white, calm, steady. In- wardly moved by more than her vocational sympathy for suffering human beings. Whatever the frailty of the patient her life must be preserved.

There was no movement of her body, no flicker of her long lashes, when Judy spoke again. It was a whisper, a clear even whisper, with- out any changes of inflection; a sort of chant.

"It's very nice here, Cardy. Such a wonderful view!"

In an immediate panic, Tom got to his feet. "I must get out," he said.

"Already? Why?"

"It's too frightfully unfair to stay and listen in—to take advantage of her illness. . ."

The nurse put her hand on his arm. "Never mind ethics," she said. "I most strongly advise you to stay. You love this girl, I can see, and whatever she did you will forgive. You will never ask her to tell you the story of last night and she won't ever say anything against a man who's dead. It may be your fault in some way and this may be your chance. . ."

The whisper came again and there was the faint suggestion of laughter in it which curdled Tom's blood.

"This yacht, your cottage, that amazing apartment in New York are rather dazzling, Cardy, I don't mind telling you. Then, too, you're a very good-looking person and you do things well. They all make for fascination upon the average silly girl. Say what you like, the world is silly, because these brief pas- sionate interludes mean almost nothing to you. You go from one to another without the slightest hurt. Oh, one knows all these stories. They're all flying about. But having dashed into this adven- ture without any thought and not being, to be brutally frank, in the least bit in love, I see now—I'm sorry, Cardy—what a silly fool I am. . . No, no, Eloquence won't work and you're requested not to touch the exhibits, or words to that effect. I hate to turn out a spoli- sport, having gone so far, but you're going to treat me as though I were a wise old wom- an, a rather ugly aunt. Really, Cardy, that's true. We'll dine, and smoke, and talk, and listen to the gramophone, say good- night fairly early, meet again for breakfast—scrambled eggs for me—and then you'll drive me back. I apologize for misleading you and 'Thank you in advance,' as they say in business letters, for your charming consideration which I greatly appreciate. . . I never knew until this moment, Cardy, how deeply I love Tom."

The chant continued for a mo- ment but was too faint to under- stand.

The doctor came into the room. "That's all for today," he said.

Tom rose, bent over Judy and kissed her on the lips. He left on her cheeks something so grateful that it glistened like dew.

Tom sat, bending forward, hold- ing on to his wrist.

The nurse did not know how to describe his expression except in medical terms. "Acute pain in the head," she stood at the end of the bed, white, calm, steady. In- wardly moved by more than her

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

May 20—A little cold and cloudy this morning but the day proves a repetition of other perfect Spring days.

Mr. and Mrs. Leland Austin and little daughter, Beale Edith, of Bryant Pond were week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Davis at Davis homestead.

Many of our manufacturing companies are receiving especially large orders at this time. The Penley Company is employing many women for both day and night work. Those given employment from South Woodstock are Mrs. Florence Benson, Mrs. Zella Silver, Mrs. Evelyn Barrett, Mrs. Flora Swinton, Mrs. Edith Herrick and Mrs. Jessie Flagg.

Mrs. Arlene Lefoy and little daughter, Audrey Ann, are visiting at Redding the guest of her friend, Mrs. Cole, a school girl friend while both were students at Pine Tree Academy and from which both were graduated students.

Mrs. Rose Perkins of South Andover is a guest of her sister, Mrs. George Hendrickson, and family of this place. She will also visit while here with her niece, Mrs. Myrtle Thurlow, and family and with the family of her nephew, Alva Hendrickson.

A very large congregation was present at the services of the Seventh Day Advent Church, Saturday, May 19. Visitors were present from Rumford, Redding, Norway, Mechanic Falls and from several other towns.

Margery Laurance, who has been the guest of her friend, Miss Elsie Dean, for a long visit has now returned to her home in Paris.

Mrs. Jessie Andrews went to Auburn, May 18, and brought her son, Leonard, home from Maine School of Commerce for the week end. Mrs. Andrews was accompanied on the trip by Mrs. Olive Pinkree Davis.

Wednesday afternoon, May 16, Mrs. Jessie Andrews invited the members of the Willing Workers to her home for a special "get-together." It was mistrusted that Mrs. Andrews had something of special interest on hand and some 15 ladies accepted the invitation which read, "Come, your services needed." It seems that Mrs. Andrews had had a special message that "the stork" was very soon to visit the family of a neighbor where the mother seemed already overburdened with household cares and to prepare dainty little garments and comforts for that mother was the work awaiting their arrival. Some planned, some cut, others sewed. Every one was busy. And what a big amount of work was done! A complete layette, extra pieces in case of more than one (you can't fool the wise heads of the Willing Workers), were all prepared night wraps and bed clothes also for when needed were all ready, and at five o'clock a messenger was dispatched to the home bearing the gift with best of wishes for the welfare of mother and child.

Friends of "The Braves of Molly Ockett" gave them a reception and a good will offering on Thursday evening, May 17. The wives and maidens of the honored guests were put wise that the proceeds of this box pie supper put up at auction sale should be given to the Braves as a tribute to former deeds of valor and an incentive to future glorious victories. As in everything else here at South Woodstock when come worthy project gets in action, the affair was a success. Much competition was shown among the younger braves in bidding for the pies made by special favorites among the dark-eyed maidens. Chief Big Gun had to use a restraining mandatory order of command, when nearly riot order ensued as his daughter's favor, the beautiful Princess Tahala, was being sought. The price was finally decided and one dollar and seventy-five cents in wampum was the winning price paid by Brava Gracie. The sale price netted the goodly sum of about fifteen dollars.

FARMERS AND TEST TUBES SAY, CUT HAY EARLY

Custom says to start haying the first Monday after the Fourth of July, but the laboratory test tubes and recent experiences on fifteen Maine farms show that it pays to cut hay early—around June 20th, according to A. K. Gardner, Crops Specialist for the Extension Service.

"In order to check up on the effect of early cutting and fertilizing on protein content and yield," Gardner says, "we sampled, weighed, and analyzed 50 lots of grass from farms in Franklin, Penobscot and Somerset counties last year. Results were in accord with previous investigations in other states. Fertilizers increased both yield and protein; early cutting increased protein but decreased yield. The part of the field belonging to C. E. Gould, Phillips, which was fertilized, yielded 3600 pounds of 13.66 per cent protein grass on June 30, while the part not fertilized yielded only 2050 pounds of 7.41 per cent protein hay. This is a difference of 320 pounds of protein per acre.

"On the E. Hilton farm in Somerset county, a field of alsike clover was sampled on June 20th, July 6th and August 1st. The protein percentage dropped from over 12 per cent to 11 per cent and then to 8 per cent during this period. On the Clyde Getchell farm in the same county a field of timothy somewhat weedy analyzed over 8 per cent protein on June 16 and only a little over 5 per cent on July 25th.

Alton Robinson of Bingham had both kinds of hay last year, that is, some cut early and some cut late. He said: "When I changed from late cut hay to early cut hay for feed in the winter, I could feed one-half as much and still produce as much milk."

H. F. Weeks of New Portland says, "If early cut hay analyzes 14 per cent protein, why don't we cut it early and then cut the second crop which will also be high in protein rather than wait and cut one late crop? The one late crop is no where near as good as the two crops would be."

Harold Doe, the president of the Somerset Dairy Herd Improvement Association has this to say, "When I started feeding my early cut hay in the Spring I was able to reduce my ensilage feeding by 50 per cent."

F. L. Frost of Herman is one of a large number who use cyanamide very early in the spring to top dress a good timothy stand; he used a 200-pound application."

CHAPTER X

Hope of Heaven.

MARY looked askance at Denis when she met him, waiting beside his roadster, just as pink-tinted gray the following morning, Denis smiled down at her coyly as they started. "It had to be at this unholy hour. My days packed full. I can just about back in time for the first thing my regular schedule."

What has to be done—and I'll show you what. "And why?" he car sped onward through an asite valley, at the end of which they came to the descent of the last canyon.

Before starting down Craig stepped in a jungle of bracken. To the left, upon a rough and isolated eminence commanding a view of the valley and the canyon below, stood an old vaquero's cabin. "I'd rather own that cabin than the rest of your project!" Mary said impulsively. But when she made no answer, she looked at the cabin to him—and then away again with a sudden tightening in throat, and a quick rush of something that hinted of underling in her heart.

Denis—Denis Craig was moved—deeply moved, really moved, by beauty. She had it with her ears before. Now saw it with her eyes. That something—much—as yet visible to her.

She was becoming tangible. She was quite—had it now. It was not this? The man beside might be a dreamer, but he had in his dreams. That made sincere, did it not? Mary's mind was made up about Craig, at last.

As they descended until wall advancing toward gray left room for the creek and cre, and in the bed of this they until they came out of the m.

the head of the canyon, a fireplace in that cabin, Craig suggested.

"I know it? I've lunched every time we've been walking distance. Once it was rainy and I was dog-made the party go on with me, and I spent the night there. I brought me milk and eggs mountain lore. It was a heavy-lit."

He smiled quietly. Then, "Ap of the fireplace, and the sus—there are bacon and eggs back of the car. What you say to a bit of break-ran into the old cabin, built their fire of crackling and set the coffee pot on to they made toast together, it to the coals on the ends. They ate youthfully.

They had finished, Mary to the window and stood out dreamily. "You find romance in this old to you, Mary?" Denis broke her reverie, coming to her "I've always thought it was particular sanctuary."

He gave my hope of heaven to to buy it."

she? What if Denis could doubts of him had?

gone scurrying off, sheepish-tailed, like an ashamed little dog that has barked at a make-believe cat? What if he could read the dreams she was dreaming now? This retreat, remodeled to preserve all its rustic romance, shared by the two of them? This project—seeing the thing through together, her funds, his management—

Hastily she attempted a light answer. "I'm—always a little mad when I'm with you, Denny!"

"That's the sweetest thing you ever said to me, Mary. It means things. Just as it meant things when you said you loved this old cabin. I love it, too. I want it. You want it."

He was very close to her. His hair brushed hers as he bent to ask, "Has it ever occurred to you, dear, that maybe we want the same things of life, you and I—all through?"

She looked up at him quickly. Teasing had come into his eyes. Teasing—and tenderness, and his arm went about her shoulder. "That we want the same things of life—even though the first words you heard me utter convinced you—just the contrary?"

"Money talks," he shrieked, even at this moment. Ah, but it no longer shrieked that money was his god. His dreams were that. His dreams—which might run away with him occasionally—but in which he believed.

Still, money was obtruding now. Omnibusly. Terrifyingly. Wanting to tell him the truth of herself, wanting to shout her silent partnership from the housetops—fear tied her tongue. If she told him—she'd lose him! A millionaire in her own name, until he had spent her inheritance. An heir to millions! That made men run—the ones you might love.

"Mary!" He turned her face up to his. "You have to tell me this! Do you love young Goodenough?" "Oh, no!" quickly. "That is—of course, I love him. But I love Holt and Don and John and the chief and—"

"Darling, don't you dare put me in that pigeon-hole!" "You don't belong," tremulously, "in that one."

"And just where do I belong?" His face—his eyes—his lips—so close! And she had imagined he was putting her aside these days! An arm closed about her. His cheek touched her forehead.

Unsteadily, "At least, you aren't putting me from you any more, dear."

Putting him from her? If only he'd never let her go! If only they could forget everything but this sweet isolation!

"Denny!" in a small smothered tone.

"Tell me."

"Couldn't we just—just drift—a little while?"

He laughed, indulgently, victoriously. "With as much as this to go on, I could be an understudy to Job!"

She raised her face, stood back from him radiant, both tangible and elusive. "You're—sweet, Denny!"

"That's a lot. Just how long, whimsically, 'do you think it will be until you discover I'm the nicest man there is, in every way?'"

Mary made a dash to their littered table, gathering up dishes. "It—oughtn't to be so very long, I should say."

Just until he made his little wad, so that his pride would stand the shock of a sweetheart in golden shackles. Money was pouring in to him these days.

"There's one thing more, Mary."

"And that?"

"We name the cabin, Hope of Heaven. Also, we dedicate it."

"Dedicate—"

"Like this."

Deliberately he took her into his arms and kissed her. A hesitant second, and two warm arms closed about his neck—and Mary contributed to the ceremony of dedication.

CHAPTER XI

Pink Slips.

NOW came the halcyon days for the Paradise Valley project. Following the land-sales convention, the tract was opened to purchasers. Soon the hills reverberated with the sound of carpenters' hammers as homes were built—consonant with their environment, as stipulated in the promoter's dream.

Deliberately He Took Her Into His Arms and Kissed Her.

"Perfect-mannered guests, these houses, Mary," Craig said whimsically one evening as they loitered through the hills on horseback. "They have come into the wilderness unobtrusively and made themselves at home, without disturbing so much of the old family regime as the mountain quails' foraging grounds. In fact, quite the contrary: the old-timers here seem to be imposing their ideas of land-scaping et cetera upon us tender feet."

Mary understood that by old-timers he meant the wild wood folk to whom these foothills had belonged time out of mind. She liked his attitude.

"How about draperies and furniture, Mary?" he queried, one day. "For Hope of Heaven?"

"But why ask me?" "Just for advice," guilelessly. "If you were equipping Hope of Heaven as a week-end rendezvous for the crowd, how would you furnish it?"

"With the things I bought for my own room in Foggy Gulch—when I forgot I wasn't a bloated plutocrat," said Mary promptly. "Then I'd save the storage I'm paying on them now."

"Marvelous! I'll have them moved out tomorrow." And he added: "It makes a neat arrangement. Gives me a mortgage of sorts."

He had a mortgage. But it was more a partnership than a mortgage to which he laid claim. A sweetly preposterous partnership.

That evening as they turned their horses' heads toward headquarters, Denis summed up their survey with a heartfelt, "Mary! I have not demeaned the wilds!"

She saw him again, the young man on the mountain with five hundred dollars in his pocket, seeing his ten-million-dollar vision.

"You've carried out the dream perfectly, Denny! Your ideal home place still looks like virgin wilderness. Every one who comes is so ecstatic over it. But Denny! Strangers can't love it as we do, who made it. Out there against Lone mountain tonight I see three million-dollar buildings arising. But I shall always see, more vividly, shall not you, Denny, the five hundred mules at one time corralled there?"

"You are a darling!" "Denny, when it is all completed—what shall you do? Stay here—or move on to new dreams?"

"Which shall we?" he asked. He held out his hand, she put hers into it, and so they rode down the hill in the gathering shadows. Drifting. Just drifting.

But Denis was very gay these days, very confident of her, very teasing. Mary saw him infrequently, so occupied he was. But he did not let her forget him for a moment. Once when he scarcely had seen her for a week he came to her drafting table with a brisk, "I just wanted to remind you, Miss Brown," picking up her drawing of a rustic bridge, "that," he lowered his tone as he bent to trace a meaningless line on the drawing, "I love you." He was gone, stopping at other desks. But from the doorway in leaving, he called back, as if it were a matter of figures and angles, "You won't forget that point I made, Miss Brown? It is important."

"I'll make a note of it, Mr. Craig."

"I Love You."

Happiness like this came to a girl unshackled by millions.

Success and prosperity pervaded the atmosphere. Settlement of the project went on with unbelievable swiftness. Upon nearly twenty thousand rolling acres young orchards added swift inches to their stature.

A few months of these halcyon days, and then a vague, insidious uneasiness came creeping into the atmosphere. Rumors there were, coming from no one knew where. The project's momentum was letting up considerably. The project was wobbling. The project was on its last legs. Apprehension was in the air.

And, most disconcerting of all, there was worry back of the assurance in Denis Craig's eyes and words; questionable mirth in his smile.

A month or two of this, and payment checks were a week late. The following month they were two weeks late. There were apologies, but no explanation. "Handwriting on the wall," diagnosed the older engineers who had been on development projects before.

Mary Brown set her lips in a straight line and lunged up her patriarchal head. Not all the rumors on the twenty-five thousand acres could shake her faith in Denis Craig, once she had given it!

One evening at a ball by which the rich girl from the train christened the fifty thousand-dollar house on her estate, Mary pleaded fatigue, and asked Denis to take her home early. She had to talk to him.

"What's the trouble, Denis?"

"You mean," with his inextinguishable smile, "what's behind these most recent allegations that I'm a crook, de luxe?"

"I mean—what's behind the new little lines around your eyes, and the tiredness in them, the lines under them that tell on you—of insomnia! What's rocking your boat, Denis?"

"Primarily, the European war. With the upset to stability and the fear that we may become involved, payments are not coming in. Added to that, our expenses of maintenance are out of proportion to the size of our community. We still have enormous development costs to meet; our payroll is twenty thousand dollars a month. There is the interest to be met on the borrowed money with which I bought the ranch."

"Borrowed?" Mary couldn't help it. She had to ask the outright question. "I thought your million was given to you by—by some conscienceless nut—"

He looked at her quickly. "I didn't say that, did I?"

"I—I was thinking you did."

"As a matter of fact," he explained in a somewhat puzzled tone, "I might have had the money gratis; though I could swear I never mentioned it to a soul. I couldn't accept it, of course, except as a loan. What fun would there be in the game—if I had a million?"

"That's exactly what I thought!" it escaped involuntarily as a great wave of exuberance swept Mary. Money wasn't Denny's god!

"What do you mean?" he was demanding.

"I mean," she tried to extricate herself with frank truthfulness, "that we have another slant on life in common, Denny. But, you see, I couldn't understand what was making it so hard for you, thinking you had such a generous stake—"

"But you've heard me worry about my payments."

"I—hadn't figured things out. I—never gave much thought to money matters, Denny."

"You wouldn't doubt me, would you, lady?" he teased.

She slipped a hand under his on the wheel. She believed him. Dear God! She believed him! She didn't even need corroboration from her father.

A few moments later she asked, "Can't you get more time on your payments?"

"I have. Mr. Brown has been more than generous. But there are still the payrolls to meet—with ever-dwindling income, and, so far as I can judge, no chance of a pick-up of economic conditions perhaps for years. But," with his never-failing optimism, "it'll come out all right eventually."

Mary suggested mischievously, "I'm sure our hostess of tonight would be glad to help you, Denny."

"I wish I could flatter myself that there was jealousy in your heart, young lady! Could I put it there by telling you that I'm sure she'd come to my rescue?"

"Shall you let her?" lightly. But if Denny did—if he did!

"I shall not."

"Why?"

"I don't want a million with a girl attached."

"Or vice versa?" asked Mary cryptically.

"Vice versa goes, too," his eyes meeting hers ardently.

A cold little shiver swept Mary. He would be like that. She could take a million dollars' worth of worry off Denny's shoulders right now—just by calling the project ours! He need not worry about payments, nor interest. What if she should suggest it?

How Denny would run! There was nothing for her to do but wait until he had won out. Years, perhaps, she must pretend just to drift, if she didn't want to lose him altogether!

He alighted and opened the door for her.

"Mary, these are hard days for me. But I glory in them! And do you know what gives me courage to go on?"

His face in the moonlight, was exalted, transported.

"What, Denny?"

"Your faith in me, Mary!"

"Oh!"

"You don't know you have it, sweet. But it's there. I see it in your eyes, in your smile, in the lift of your shining head! That's what gives zest to the battle. Fighting it—for you!"

His words, his attitude, making the golden wall between them more unsurmountable! With a little cry Mary reached up and drew his face down to her, pressed her cheek against it for a moment, and ran inside.

A week later the engineers of the Paradise Valley Project arrived at their offices one morning to find a pink slip upon each desk.

A pink slip. The official notice of dismissal.

The project, then, had gone "dooney"! All work was suspended. The beautiful dream had pattered out, according to prophecy.

How Dust Storms Start

Dust storms are generated by the same air mechanics that build the beautiful fleecy cumulus clouds of the middle strata of the atmosphere. Science Service explains. When the sun has been shining strongly on the earth for some time, a considerable mass of air is warmed, and since warm air is less dense than cold air, it begins to rise, sometimes nearly vertically. If there is plenty of moisture in the soil and vegetation, these rising air currents carry up water vapor, which on cooling in the upper levels condenses into clouds. If, however, there has been a drought of several weeks' duration, as frequently happens in the West in late autumn and early spring a dust storm results.
